C. of C. Show Is Big Success

"A Night in Dreamland," the production of which was witnessed by more than a thousand people in the Sequoia auditorium Wednesday has been pronounced a great success. At the request of many who were unable to see the spectacle at the first production it was again staged last evening to a large audience. The affair was staged under the personal direction of Jay Wellington, the author, and was participated in by about three hundred children and adults.

The production was elaborate in its appointments. Bright, unique and beautiful costumes made the affair one of color, while the music combined catchy new tunes with old familar ones. The stage was made beautiful by thousands of flowers.

The cast contained 300 persons and a great deal of talented action was shown. The entire directing of the production was done by Wellington, and his success with so large a cast was phenomenal. Henry Witte had charge of the business mangement, which was highly successful.

A high sense of the claim of the animal world upon us for justice and compassion is not a modern idea. The most of us are still far behind. Plutarch recognized these claims. Men of other and older civilizations than our own, of which we boast as Christian, could put the great majority of us to shame by the regard they had for life's lowlier forms.

MILLBRAE MAY GET S. F. AIRPORT

That the proposed airport to be established in this county by the City and County of San Francisco may be located at Millbrae is the report received following the consideration of a site in that place by a special committee appointed by the board of supervisors of San Francisco. The City of San Francisco has been considering a site in South San Francisco and all legal barriers have now been removed for the expenditure of money in this county by San Francisco for this purpose.

It is now reported, however, that a satisfactory site can be secured in Millbrae for about one third of the cost of the site under consideration in South San Francisco. The matter is now under consideration by the committee. The Millbrae site is not as available for seaplane use as the tract at South San Francisco, and whether the additional expense which would be required to develop the harbor land for this use would more than offset the lower purchase price is the main topic for consideration.

WELL-KNOWN RESIDENT OF SAN CARLOS DIES

Funeral services were held Wednesday from the James Crowe undertaking parlors for Jerimiah J. Johnson, well-known resident of San Carlos, who passed away Monday at the home of his son, Rupert Johnson, at that city after a long illness. Services were conducted by Rev. Walter Doty of St. Peter's Episcopal church of this city.

The deceased was a native of Marion county, Indiana, and was 7 years of age. He came to California 58 years ago and had spent most of that time in Santa Cruz. For the past few years he has been making his home with his son at San Carlos. He is survived by two sons, Rupert C. Johnson and Philo S. Johnson. His wife passed away several years ago.

SERVICES HELD FOR AUTO FIRE VICTIM

Funeral services were held at the James Crowe undertaking parlors Tuesday for Daniel C. Irwin, who was burned to death when his car turned over on the state highway at Tanforan Saturday evening. The funeral services were conducted by Argonaut Lodge No. 461, F. & A. M., of which the deceased was a member and were attended by members of that lodge and of the local Masonic lodge. The services here were to have been followed by crémation at Cypress Lawn, but the plans were changed by a telegram from Irwin's father asking that the body be sent east. A messenger was sent after the funeral procession and overtook it near San Mateo. The body was brought back to Redwood City and sent to the father's home in the east.

The deceased was a native of Pennsylvania and 34 years of age. He was a salesman for a manufacturing concern, and was very well known in this city. He was prominent in lodge work, and a member of California Bodies of the Scottish Rite and of Islam Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Myrtle Irwin, a young son, and by his father.

The accident which resulted in Irwin's death occurred as he was returning from San Francisco at night. It is thought that he must have gone to sleep at the wheel and swerved off the highway. The car struck three trees before it turned over and burst into flames. A passing motorist seeing the fire and thinking that it was the eucalyptus trees that were burning, left word at the San Bruno fire department that the trees along the highway were on fire. The department went immediately to the scene of the blaze and found that it was a car that was burning. Irwin's body was found in the smouldering ruins of the machine.

MILLIONS SAVED NATION THROUGH RAIL EFFICIENCY

Saving the American people at least one and one-half billion dollars annually and affecting all business and industry, the improvement in railroad freight service is probably the most important change in the United States since the war, according to J. H. Dyer, general manager for Southern Pacific Company.

"Car shortages have been eliminated to such an extent," Dyer said, "that save for occasional sporadic instances, shippers are being furnished 100 per cent of the cars they request, when and where they want them.

"Loaded freight cars are being moved from point of origin to destination in two-thirds of the time required six years ago and regularity and dependability of freight deliveries have been immeasurably increased.

"Estimates of business leaders and economists indicate that this improvement is worth at least $1,500,000,000 to the nation, is several hundred million dollars more annually than the total net operating income of the railroads.

"This view is supported by the statement of Secretary of Commrce, Herbert Hoover, that each periodic transportation shortage, the last of which occurred in 1922, caused 'a loss to the American people of a billion dollars.'

"Southern Pacific, by the expenditure of millions of dollars for new freight cars and motive power, has been able practically to eliminate car shortages on its lines. Facilities are now available to meet almost any demand for cars which can be foreseen. Especially is the improvement notable in the facilities provided to move perishable crops to eastern markets.

"In the improved situation due credit must be given to the helpful cooperation of the shippers.

ROAD CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS BEGUN

At the meeting of the board of supervisors held last Tuesday a resolution was passed and adopted by the members directing the district attorney to begin a condemnation suit at once against the abutting owners of land on Willow Road. The proceedings are to be commenced on the ground of public necessity. The county needs the road to improve it as it is in the main thoroughfare to the Dumbarton bridge. The county some time ago brought suit in abatement but by this method the county could not secure possession of the road at once so the other legal proceedings will be commenced when the supervisors will get control and may commence macadamizing the thoroughfare right away. The right of way charges and other legal entanglements may be faught out in court later.

The supervisors have levied a special tax of seven cents on the one hundred dollars for the improvement of this road. While it is true that this fund will not be available right away it is understood that funds will be forthcoming to make the repairs and improvements contemplated.

The Dumbarton bridge proper was finished this week. The last span was put in place Wednesday so it is now ready for travel. The approach on the west side is rapidly nearing completion, only 400 yards of fill remains to be done. It is believed the formallity of the bridge will be made on October first.

363rd INFANTRY TO HOLD 8th REUNION

The 8th reunion of the 128th infantry, "San Francisco's Own" will prove one of the most enjoyable events since the signing of the armistice if present plans by the committee in charge are any criterion. "A Night in Cheppy Woods," it is to be called, and everything to recall the old days to the vets of the Powder River will be on hand. It is even rumored that the comissary committee is rearing a banquet of gold fish and cornwooley.

Honorary President James Rolph Jr. and President H. A. Van Der Zee are planning to make the 8th reunion the best to be held since the war, and every "Powder River Man" that can be found on this side of the Versailis-Paris-Nagent salient is expected to attend. The date is September 25 and reservations and tickets can be secured from J. P. Cullen at 203 Phelps street.

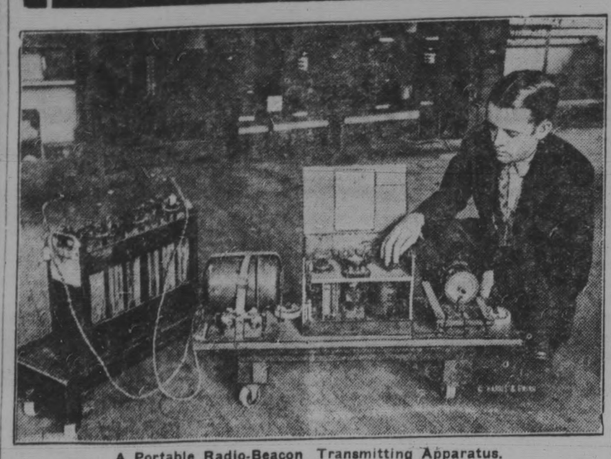
RADIO



A Portable Radio-Beacon Transmitting Apparatus.

The average listener, while knowing in a general way that the radio compass is one of the most remarkable developments of the age, really doesn't understand exactly what it is or why the United States leads all the world in this up-to-the-minute aid to navigation. This appeared to be the case with several members of the house committee considering the navy appropriation bill, with the result that the following extremely interesting information regarding the use of the radio compass was brought out at a recent hearing:

Representative Hardy of Colorado: Just what is a radio compass station?

Commander Glassford, U. S. N.: A radio compass is for the purpose primarily of enemy tracking in war. In peace these stations are used as aids to navigation in furnishing ships at sea their bearings from the station or stations, from which the ship's position may be determined. The apparatus at the radio-compass stations is so designed as to be able to determine accurately the direction from the station of a radio emission. When a ship at sea, for instance, sends out a radio emission from her own transmitter, the radio-compass station can tell the direction or bearing of the ship. In foggy weather it is very comforting to a captain of a ship to know his bearings from any fixed objects on land. Preferably radio-compass stations are in groups of three in order that a positive check may be had by a ship on the interception of bearings sent to him.

Representative Ayres of Kansas: You speak of the ship out at sea striking on its key and then three different stations, receiving the message from different directions, being able to locate this particular ship?

Commander Glassford: Yes, sir.

Mr. Ayres: Now that is used in what kind of case—in the case of a vessel being lost at sea, or for what different purposes may it be used?

Commander Glassford: For instance, when a ship is making New York harbor and she has not been able to get a sun sight or star sight.

Mr. Ayres: On account of fogs, or something?

Commander Glassford: On account of fogs, hazy weather, strong currents and so forth—she does not really know where she is except approximately by dead-reckoning navigation. As she approaches the coast, by a system of signals everybody concerned understands, she will request this group, we will say, of three radio-compass stations at the entrance of the harbor of New York, about 50 miles apart, to give her bearings. All three compass stations are listening for their signal from the ship and when it is made the stations detect the direction from which it is coming. There is a master station of the three which co-ordinates all three of those bearings, getting the necessary information from the other stations by telephone, telegraph or radio.

In a very short time (in about 15 seconds, we will say) this master station charts these three bearings, and if accurate, they should meet in a point. The bearings are then transmitted to the ship by a radio dispatch which gives the navigator the basis for a determination of latitude and longitude. This radio-compass service is free to all mariners.

Representative Oliver of Alabama: Is the business done by those stations sufficient to justify the expense of maintaining them?

Commander Glassford: The business done by our stations, sir, is imperative for the proper conduct of the navy. The commercial business that our traffic stations do is merely incidental—for which we receive pay and for which we collected, as I said, $250,000 last year. But that does not, of course, pay for keeping up the stations.

Mr. French: You speak of this other service for ships; that is free. Suppose that was paid for on a basis of what other nations charge for similar services, approximately what would it be worth?

Commander Glassford: The system would pay for itself, sir.

Mr. French. But, in dollars, what would it be worth?

Commander Glassford: The British charge $1.25 a bearing; the French, $1.20; Sweden, $1.30. We gave 125,606 bearings during the last fiscal year. At the British rate, which is the average, this service would be worth $158,257.50.

Mr. Oliver: Do you think it advisable to require that this service be paid for by those who use it?

Commander Glassford: That has been gone into, sir, very carefully, and we reached the conclusion that it would not—for this reason. We do not believe the mariners at sea would use it to the extent they do now. In England, for instance, the mariners use the radio-compass system much less than they do here, and what we want is to have our men get the practice and to be efficient at all times, so that they are ready in an emergency for their real job, in time of war.

Mr. French: It means the saving of life and property?

Commander Glassford: It does, and it is a tremendous boost to our own people at sea. We feel that they would not use it to the extent they do and would not get the benefit that they do now, if they had to pay for it.

Mr. Anderson: It seems to me the best illustration of the value of this radio-compass service I can recall is about two or three years ago there was a merchant ship afire at sea about 50 or 60 miles off Norfolk. She sent an S O S stating in latitude and longitude what she assumed to be her position. The coast guard cutter Manning got steam up immediately and proceeded to the position given, but there was no trace of the ship to be found. The captain of the Manning, fully cognizant of this navy radio-compass service, called Norfolk navy radio and asked Norfolk to see if she could raise the ship. Norfolk made the call and the ship heard it and called Norfolk back. The radio-compass station then took bearings, charted her position, and called it back to the Manning. The Manning proceeded to the new position, 25 miles away from the spot originally given, found the ship, and towed her in. The captain of the vessel did not know where he was and the compass stations found him 25 miles away from where he thought he was.

FOR RADIO FANS

An ordinance has been passed in Dixon, Ill., making it unlawful for any persons "to have, operate or maintain any instrument of device that interferes in any way with radio reception."

The Department of Commerce is now co-operating with nearly 150 broadcasting stations in sending out weather reports, and practically all parts of the United States are within their range.

A radio workshop has been installed in a large department store in London in which fans can build their own sets under the guidance of a skilled radio mechanic. There is no charge for the service.

A surprising amount of dust drifts into the necks of horn-type loud speakers. It is a good idea to unscrew the horn every once in a while and to blow out any accumulation that is visible.

The average 1926 radio set costs $80, according to an estimate based on the complete listing of all sets. The weight of the average set is 13 pounds. It contains five tubes, two stages of audio-frequency, two stages of radio-frequency and detector.

Six-Tube Receivers Are Favored by Many Fans

Most listeners are familiar with five-tube sets which employ two stages of radio-frequency, amplification, detector and two stages of audio amplification, as this is one of the most popular receivers at the present time. A number of six-tube sets have been produced during the past season and the coming season will no doubt see the introduction of many more sets of this type.

All the new receivers using six tubes feature certain refinements over the average five-tube set, and therefore are somewhat more attractive. The sixth tube serves to increase the amount of amplification through the audio or radio-frequency amplifiers, to permit better control through the use of two main tuning units, or to improve the quality of reproduction.

One of the first six-tube sets that was placed on the market contained two stages of radio amplification, detector and three stages of audio amplification. The extra tube used as an audio amplifier brought up the signal strength from distant stations for loud speaker reception. Very low ratio transformers were used and the amplification characteristics over the audio range were said to be better than those of the ordinary five-tube set.

Another variation in six-tube receiver design is that of the set with three stages of radio-frequency amplification. The tuning condensers in the antenna coupler and first stage of radio are connected in tandem as are those in the other two stages of radio amplification. This method permits the set to be operated by two main tuning dials. Besides simplifying tuning this arrangement improves the receiver for the reception of distant stations.

A six-tube set that appeared on the market uses three stages of radio amplification, one of which is untuned. The antenna coupler condenser and the two condensers in the other two radio amplifiers are all connected together so that the receiver has but one main tuning condenser. Ease of operation is the feature of this set.

AFTER all these economic and political conferences, the President went by automobile to Plattsburg, where he reviewed the citizens' military training camp. It was a sixty-five-mile ride for the party. Sixteen hundred citizen-soldiers paraded before the Chief Executive, after which he was entertained at luncheon by Col. J. P. Hughes, commander of the camp, and started back to White Pine camp.

HOPE for an early settlement of the religious controversy in Mexico waned again. The episcopate found little encouragement in the attitude of President Calles, and voted in favor of carrying on the struggle on the lines already laid out. In this it has the support of the Vatican. The pope made a statement to the press reiterating the policy of the holy see, which, in effect, is that no agreement with the Mexican government is possible until the laws of Mexico, which are regarded at Rome as aiming at the destruction of the Catholic church, are revoked. The communication said the Vatican "has no confidence in President Calles' declarations and has no hope that President Calles will ever make a sincere, peaceful and just proposition to the church." Later the holy see announced that the news it had received indirectly from Mexico confirms "the complete falsity of the Mexican government reports anent the negotiations between Calles and the episcopacy."

Ambassador Sheffield had a long conference in Washington with Secretary of State Kellogg and soon afterward started for the Adirondacks to report to President Coolidge. The only official statement concerning the meeting with Mr. Kellogg was the positive declaration that Mr. Sheffield would not resign but would return to his post on expiration of his leave of absence, and the announcement by Mr. Kellogg that there would be no immediate change in the administration's Mexican policy. The State department was still waiting for the Mexican government's reply to the latest American note concerning the oil and land laws.

Myron T. Herrick, American ambassador to France, also conferred with Secretary Kellogg, and he accompanied Mr. Sheffield to White Pine camp.

CHINA'S continuous civil war, conducted by rivals for political power and recently marked by several bloody battles, is getting on the nerves of other nations; and when the existing government at Peking proposed to issue $25,000,000 in domestic bonds for "domestic purposes," which meant for war expenses, the United States sent a note of protest. It objects to these military expenditures while American obligations, entitled to automatic priority, remain in arrears. A list of the principal creditors was appended to the protest, including the Hukang railway, Continental and Commercial bank, Pacific Development, Riggs National, Munsey Trust, and a long list of American corporations supplying railway equipment, etc.

BERLIN correspondents report that the difficulties in the way of Germany's entry into the League of Nations and a final recognition of the peace pacts of Locarno are removed through a compromise; that Spain and Poland have indicated a willingness to accept semi-permanent seats in the league's council for three or perhaps five years. Berlin is now so certain of membership in the league and a permanent seat in the council that the government has selected its representatives on the different committees of the league.

The other part of Spain's price for yielding her claim to a permanent seat—possession of Tangier—is still unsettled. Last week Madrid sent to France a note expressing the desire that the international district of Tangier be added to the Spanish zone in Morocco, and saying that if this were found unfeasible, Spain would ask the League of Nations to give her a mandate over the district. It was understood in Paris that France's reply would be an absolute refusal.

GREECE has changed dictators again. In a bloodless coup d'etat General Pangalos was overthrown by the Liberals and the power taken over, at least temporarily, by their leader, Gen. George Condylis. He promises general elections late in October or early in November. Pangalos and various members of his government were arrested and will be tried on charges of maladministration. For the time being Admiral Condouriotis is again acting as president of Greece, with General Condylis as premier.

ENGLAND'S miners and mine owners not yet having come to an agreement, the government issued a proclamation extending the state of emergency for another month. Meanwhile a good many of the miners have returned to work under separate arrangements with operators.

OUR death list contians the names of four noteworthy personages. Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard university and for two generations a leader in education, passed away at the age of ninety-two at his summer home in Northeast Harbor, Maine. He became president of Harvard when but thirty-five years old and under him it developed into a great university. In his later years he wrote and spoke on public questions, with great effect.

Another man of letters, Stuart Pratt Sherman, literary editor of the New York Herald-Tribune, died of heart failure after a strenuous swim, at Manistee, Mich. He formerly was head professor of English at the University of Illinois and was considered one of the country's best literary critics.

Bert M. Fernald, United States senator from Maine since 1916, succumbed to heart disease and diabetes at his home in West Poland, Maine. In the senate he was a member of four important committees. He was a strong advocate of prohibition, and opposed child labor measures and American membership in the League of Nations and the world court. It is easy to predict that his successor will be another Republican.

Attracting vastly more public attention than any of these deaths was the demise of Rudolph Valentino, the screen actor, in New York following operations for appendicitis and gastric ulcers. It seemed as if the entire country mourned his passing, for aside from his histrionic ability he was personally popular. In the metropolis morbid mobs of scores of thousands fought the police for a chance to look on "Rudy's" remains.

ONE of the most important of recent developments in radio came with the successful testing of a new device for radiocasting weather maps and information to ships at sea. The tests were conducted by the inventor, C. Francis Jenkins, in the presence of Charles F. Marvin, chief of the weather bureau, Commander William Glassford, acting chief of naval communications, and Capt. S. C. Hooper, of the engineering division of the navy. The naval officers were enthusiastic over the device, declaring its discovery to be of inestimable value to navigators, and predicting that as soon as they can be produced in quantity, the comparatively simple contrivances will be quickly adopted by all radio equipped vessels.

PITTSBURGH had an experience often pictured in sensational crime fiction but seldom seen in real life. A man, afterward found to be crazy, walked into the Farmers' Deposit bank and demanded $2,000 from a teller. A special officer and several bank officials gathered, when the maniac exploded a bomb he had in a hand bag. He and the officer were killed, 120 were badly injured and the interior of the building was wrecked.

J. KRISHAMURTI, the young Hindoo hailed by the Theosophists as the new voice of the "world teacher," was permitted to land in New York despite some silly objections, and Mrs. Annie Besant escorted him thence to Chicago for the Theosophists' congress.

obe Living Cost at National Capital

ington.—Bread prices in the capital will be probed by a subcommittee of the house as of determining whether or not mergers in the bread-baking , extending over New Engennsylvania, Ohio and other of the Middle West, have afcosts to bread consumers, Repsive-at-Large Rathbone (Rep., hairman, announced in a statement issued here. Other members of the committee charged with the bread investigation, under a resolution offered by Representative Brank (Rep., Ohio) are: Keller (Rep., Minn.), Lampert (Rep., Wis.), Blanton (Dem., Tex.), and Hamer (Dem., N. C.).

Bread prices were advanced one cent recently at Washington, which is included in the territory embraced by the recent mergers.

Activities of the house committee are declared by Chairman Rathbone to be in line with a settled policy of ascertaining general living costs in the District of Columbia, with a view to laying the foundation for legislation at the next session of congress affecting the salaries and wages of federal employees.

A proposal is pending in congress to provide increased minimum salaries and shorter working hours for government employees. Another item which will be investigated by the Rathbone committee is the cost of housing the thousands of federal employees at the capital.

BUDDY MYER WINS COMEBACK STUNT

Shows Much Improvement in Fielding and Batting.

Once in a while there comes to the big baseball show a young fellow who seems to have everything necessary to the making of a brilliant player. Yet this same youngster, after a fair trial, falls utterly to measure up to the major league standard and drifts back to the minors, writes John B. Keeler in the Washington Star.

Rarely does the youngster after his failure get a second trial the same season, and he who redeems himself is, indeed, a rarity. The Nationals are fortunate to have one of these rarities in Buddy Myer.

This youthful product of the Southern association, such a bitter disappointment during the early part of the campaign, since his return to the game after a month of bench-warming promises to develop into one of the flashiest shortstops of the American league. Today he is rated as one of the best hitters occupying the shortfield position in the circuit and he is improving steadily afield.

During the training season Myer showed so much ability at bat and afield that Manager Stanley Harris thought he had the find of seasons. So Buddy was installed as regular National shortstop at the outset of the championship campaign. He was given every opportunity to make a permanent job for himself, but after seven weeks of effort he had failed to make good.

So the shortstopping business was turned over to the veteran, Roger Peckinpaugh, and young Myer was left on the bench to reflect upon his failure.

Fortunately for Buddy, and the Nationals, too, Manager Harris did not altogether lose faith in the young fellow. The pilot could not rid himself of the idea that the player who had performed so smartly during the training season must possess big-league quality. And so instead of casting about for a minor league farming spot for Buddy, Harris put the shortstop on the Nationals' schooling list.

After a month of grooming, back to the game Myer came on July 1 and almost immediately he began to reveal his real worth as a ball player. He went about his work in the shortfield in more intelligent manner and with smoother style and, above all, his hitting improved wonderfully.

Trudie Is No Flapper, Can Cook and Milk Cow

Gertrude Ederle, first woman conqueror of the English channel, is a "home body," whose tastes would almost classify her as old-fashioned in the world of the modern flapper.

She is a good cook, milks cows occasionally when she is in the country, and does not smoke or drink alcoholic beverages of any kind. She does not go in for late parties, and, according to her mother, she has never allowed romance to interfere with her career as a swimmer. She does not even have a regular "boy friend," her mother said.

Swimming has been her chief interest, and she spends as much of her life as possible in the open air.

55 and Still Champion

Fifty-five years old and still winning walking races from men considerably his junior is the achievement of Fred Emmett of Calgary, Canada, who has been champion at any distance from ten to fifty miles in Western Canada for many years. Recently he won the Calgary Herald ten-mile race, covering the distance in 40 minutes 24 seconds on a boiling hot day. Emmett attributes his success to constant training whether a race is in sight or not.

TWO WOMEN PRAISE SAME MEDICINE

Both Helped by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"After the birth of my little daughter I was very badly run-down. I could not think of going to a hospital, but grew steadily worse, being compelled to stay in bed two or three days each week. A friend of my sister's told of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done her, and my sister bought me two bottles of it. I had not taken all of one bottle when I was up and able to do some work. I am truly a booster for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and you may use my testimonial."—Mrs. Mayme Lynch, 1119 Island Ave., Ext., McKee's Rocks, Pa.

Mrs. Hope L. Smith, a farmer's wife of Route 3, Floyd, Va., says she was ill for ten years with a good deal of pain in her side and so weak she could hardly work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped her so much she is telling her friends about it.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a dependable medicine.

GOOD ORGANIZATIONS

The past few days have seen the formation of two organizations in Redwood City which should have the effect of a good influence in the future of our city. Among the young ladies of Redwood City a branch of the Young Ladies Institute has been formed. This is sponsored by the Catholic church and is for young ladies of the Catholic religion. The other organization is that of the Order of De Molay, an order for boys between the ages of 16 and 21 fostered by the Masonic Lodge. Both organizations are working with the young people of the town and will help in the building of good clean manhood and womanhood as well as offering pleasant entertainment.

More and more organizations of one kind and another are playing a decided part in the building of character and the moulding of thought. Such work among the young people of a community is of great value, and Redwood City can well welcome among its organizations the two new additions to its roll. We wish them both success and the fullest and best development.

OBLIGING PRESS AGENTS

We received a letter this week fram a big traveling show in San Francisco asking for some free publicity. The press agent of the show kindly offered to "back up" all statements we would make or anything which we wished to say about the show. It is, indeed, gratifying to have someone willing to back up everything the editor wants to say, and we hope some of the politicians in the November election will offer us the same privilege.

—o—o—o—

A DANGER FROM WITHIN

It has been said that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, and this people, boasting of more liberty, perhaps, than any other national body, should be the more vigilant. But with more to lose we appear to be less jealous of our rights, and more inclined to forfeit our privileges as time goes on. This is strikingly shown by the laxity of our citizens in registering and voting. A large and increasing proportion of our population fail to use their right of franchise.

Rights and liberties must be used to be maintained. Otherwise they will decay like the unused muscle and become useless. An example of this was shown in Italy recently when the people were deprived of even the right of electing their municiple officers, this function now being usurped by the dictator.

It was recently stated by a speaker before the Kiwanis Club here that no nation ever failed because of the attacks of Bulshevists or anarchists. The danger lay within, in the body of the citizenry itself. Neglect of public duty, if left unchecked, will bring about national dissolution. To be sure, the saffron hued politician is responsible for a great part of the general distaste for anything connected with elections. So much of an unsavory character, so much that is foul, rotten and disgusting has been associated in the public mind with office seeking, that the very mention of politics creates in many a good citizen a feeling of nausea.

This is unfortunate. That the system by which free government must be supported should become degraded in the public mind is nothing short of a national calamity. But even while we grant that many conditions are not what they might be, it must be remembered that things will not be remedied by good citizens remaining at home while their less sensitive neighbors register their opinions at the polls.

Those who rebel at abuses of self-seeking politicians are the very ones, who if they would use the power which the constitution grants them for that very purpose, could put a stop to the very abuses which they deplore.

We have faith in human nature. We believe that there are more good than bad people in the world. Therefore, it stands to reason that if the bad are in power, it is because the good have neglected their rights. And instead of giving up in disgust citizens who believe that reform is necessary, should register and vote. If they fail in this they should not complain if those of whom they disapprove are elected by citizens who do vote.

DO YOU KNOW?

In primitive times when every household could and did supply every need of the family; when the family cow provided milk and butter; the sheep, wool which was made into cloth by the women and by them also into clothes; when the father killed his own beef and tanned the hides to make the shoes for the family—in those times there was no need of advertising. When living became more diversified, however, when one man started to follow one line of work and another, another,some means became necessary to indicate to the world in general what kind of goods each merchant had for sale. This was the first need of advertising. Today, with the growth of trade, the need of advertising has grown proportionately, yet the same need prompts the merchant to advertise. If every merchant in town were sure that everyone who needed his goods knew all about the line he carries—knew that his prices are no higher than in the city; knew that his stock is just as good as carried in some of the large emporiums of the city, and his overhead expense less; if the merchant knew that each one who needs what he has to sell would think of all this when he wants to buy something, there would be no need of advertising. But that's one thing the merchant does not know.

HUGE STILL FOUND ON COASTSIDE RANCH

What has been described by prohibition officials as the largest distillery to be found in California was located and raided Monday by federal prohibition officers. The still was found in a barn in a deep ravine near Moss Beach on the coastside of this county. The equipment of the distillery was most elaborate, and the capacity of the still is estimated at about 1000 gallons of alcohol a day. The value of the property which was seized or destroyed by the officers is estimated at $150,000.

With the still were found 28 five thousand gallon vats of mash and 2,500 gallons of finished alcohol. The equipment included three large copper boilers and condensers 60 feet in height which extended above the roof of the barn, but were hidden by the trees with which the building was surrounded.

Three men were arrested for operating the still. The men are Robert Ames, George Bertolucci and Bruno Lucci. Ames is also believed to have had a part in the battle at Moss Landing in Monterey county last year when the sheriff of that county was wounded and a deputy was killed. with a machine gun used by the rum runners. When the officers arrested the three men Monday several shots were fired before the trio could be placed under arrest. The officers declare that the distillery was protected by an alarm system operated by lookouts posted on nearby hills.

LONG AWAITED WESTERN SPECTACLE THRILLS CROWDS AT THEATRES

Notable Principals and Huge Cast Present Stirring Drama of 1876—With Tremendous Climax in Custer's Last Stand

"The Flaming Frontier," the Univrsal Production coming Monday and Tuesday to the Sequoia Theatre, is a picture play in addition to commemorating a great event in American history abounds in excellent acting in a story featured with a pretty romance, side-splitting comedy and situations that are as tremendous and thrilling as they are unusual.

The story is of the period of the early seventies and has for its big theme the winning of the West and the hardships and trials that beset the settlers of those days. It—faithfully depicts the resentment of the Indians, the political intrigues at Washington and climaxes in a thrilling and spectacular reproduction of the Custer Massacre. One of its very powerful touches are the scenes showing life at West Point in the period.

HOOT GIBSON AND ANNE CORNWALL IN "THE FLAMING FRONTIER" A UNIVERSAL PRODUCTION

The all-star cast given this picture is one of the most evenly balanced that has been, seen for some time. Edward Sedwick, who directed it, has made it a truly great American picture. Hoot Gibson, Universal's famous Western "ace," is cast in a most congenial role. Gibson is an army scout, and as such does some of his remarkable feats in the saddle. The picture also allows Gibson to show his versatility as, for a time, it takes him away from his horse and sets him down as a cadet at West Point.

Dustin Farnum is cast in the heroic role of Gen. Custer and acquits himself with the ease and ability that has always marked his work on the stage and screen. Dainty Anne Cornwall, as the heroine, again shows that she is a great actress. Ward Crane is the "heavy" and, as usual, is smoothness personified. Kathleen Key makes an alluring vamp of herself at the end of the picture. Eddie Gribbon and Harry Todd provoke many a laugh by their clever comedy work.

Others in this great cast are Harold Boodwin, Charles K. French, Noble Johnson, William Steele, Walter Rodgers, Ed. Wilson and Joe Bonomo.

The comedy subject features Bobby Vernon in "Dummy Love" and in addition there is to be shown the popular topics of the day, being comical quips from the press of the country.

Important Announcement

TRANSCONTINENTAL TELEPHONE SERVICE CHANGES

Effective October 1, 1926

Reduction in Transcontinental Rates

Substantial reductions will be made in Transcontinental rates, for example, the day station-to-station rate between Los Angeles and Chicago will be $7.70 instead of $11.10; between Los Angeles and New York $10.75 instead of $15.65; between San Francisco and Chicago $8.25 instead of $11.90; between San Francisco and New York $11.30 instead of $16.50.

Reversed Charges on Transcontinental Station-to-Station Calls

Heretofore the reversal of charges has been available only on person-to-person calls. As a further convenience to the public this privilege will be extended to Transcontinental station-to-station calls.

Longer Reduced Rate Period on Transcontinental Calls

Reduced rate hours for Transcontinental station-to-station calls will begin at 7 P. M. instead of 8:30 P. M., as formerly. Between 7 and 8:30 P. M. the discount will be approximately 25 per cent. of the Transcontinental day station-to-station rates; from 8:30 P. M. to 4:30 A. M., the discount will be about 50 per cent. of the day rates. Because of the unsatisfactory service conditions which it brought about, the existing midnight discount will be discontinued on Transcontinental calls.

The net result of these rate changes will be a saving to the telephone users of the United States of approximately $3,000,000 a year. The service changes are made in the interests of public convenience, to relieve the burden now imposed by the congestion of business at midnight and to furnish still better service over the Transcontinental lines of the Bell System.

Better Health Longer Life

GORGAS MEMORIAL INSTITUTE

HEALTH ENGINEERING

By Agnes C. Vietor, M. D.
Boston, Mass.
Member Gorgas Memorial Institute

The complexities of the living body are explained best when compared with an engine. Both require fuel which passes through the processes of combustion and which, in so doing, is transformed into energy.

In the engine, the fuel is wood, coal, oil or gasoline; and the particular fuel is transformed into heat, light, electricity, motion, etc. In the living body the fuel is food and water; and these are transformed into heat, electricity, motion and all the intricate manifestations which group under the head of living activities—muscle and nerve power; glandular balance; thought, will judgment and all the other marvelous manifestations of brain functioning.

In both cases, the process of combustion is dependent on the presence of oxygen in the air, and on the access of this oxygen to the fuel which is in process of combustion. The living body requires, also, the addition of sunlight.

In both the engine and the living body, upbuilding and breaking down of parts are constantly occuring; hence repairs are continually required. The engine requires the constant care and control of an engineer to inspect and make the repairs, but the living body controls and makes its own repairs. When this controlling and repairing power of the body is impaired, then the physician or surgeon should be called, as an engineer, to discover and help remove the impeding obstacles, and so permit the body to resume its own controlling and repairing powers.

The living body differs from the engine in one other important way; that is, in its power of growth. There is one other interesting fact common to both the engine and the living body; namely that an impairment of one part may be first noticed through a variation in another, even a distant part. Hence, the frequent failure resulting from attention to only the part giving symptoms.

The advantage to both the engine and the living body of frequent, thorough, general examinations, by a competent engineer and attention to seemingly small troubles is consequently apparent. In this way, early beginnings of causes leading to impairment of efficiency or to organic damage may be noted and opportunity given for the avoidance of mechanical failure, on the one hand, and loss o fhealth on the other.

CITY MAY ACQUIRE ADDITIONAL AREA

Redwood City may be enlarged by the annexation of the North Fair Oaks district, lying just south of the present bounderies of the city, if an election to be held on October 5th is carried. The date was set Tuesday evening by the board of trustees of this city following the reception of a petition signed by a large number of the residents of this district asking that it be taken into the city.

The petition was signed by more than 25% of the residents of the district in question, and it is understood that the residents are almost unanimous in their desire for annexation to Redwood City. This would assure them proper fire and police protection, better sanitary conditions and other advantages of the incorporated district.

Dr. Pope bequeathed all his property to his wife, Mrs. Emma Whightman Pope, 249 Cherry street, San Francisco, saying he knew she would make proper provision for their four children. Dr. Pope died August 8. His will was made four years ago, before he went into the wilds of Africa to hunt with bow and arrows. The amount of the estate has not been determined, but it is in excess of $10,000, the petition for probate states.

CONSTRUCTIVE DEPARTMENTS OF A GREAT BANK

Educating the coming generation in thrift and finance

PERHAPS the most constructive work California's largest bank is doing today is that of promoting and encouraging habits of thrift in the young people of this state through the School Savings Department.

One hundred and five thousand school children are practicing economy, building substantial savings accounts, and learning the elements of banking and finance!

One hundred and five thousand (and ultimately there will be added many more thousands) of the coming generation will be prepared financially to carry on the business affairs of the state.

What more constructive service for this great commonwealth than that of preparing its youth for the future?

And to give this service is the esteemed privilege of the corps of enthusiastic workers in the Bank of Italy's great statewide School Savings System.

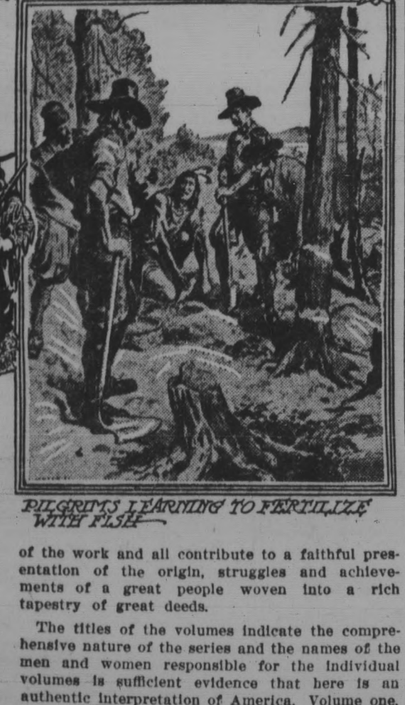
The Pageant of America

THE CONESTOGA WAGON

THE STARS AND STRIPES FOREVER

POCAHONTAS (From Original Painting)



PILGRIMS LEARNING TO FERTILIZE WITH FISH

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WHEN the historian of the future looks back upon the year 1926, it is possible that the most significant event connected with that year which marks the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the winning of American independence will not be the Sesquicentennial exposition at Philadelphia nor any of the numerous local, state and national celebrations with their parades, pageants, gatherings of patriotic citizens, speechmaking and unveiling of monuments, but the publication of a set of books! A strong statement that, perhaps. But look at "The Pageant of America," published in commemoration of the sesquicentennial of American independence by the Yale University Press, and see if you still think this an overstatement!

This article is not a "book review." It is the story of a new kind of exploring expedition, of an adventure in American history. It is a story of a fine piece of patriotic enterprise undertaken by an American university, the story of a brilliant achievement by a group of scholars whose perseverance and devotion to their task matched the bold imagination which conceived the idea of their quest, an achievement of which all Americans can be proud.

When the North pole and the South pole were finally reached it seemed that the possibilities for exploring hitherto unvisited spots on the globe were definitely ended. Then man's curiosity turned to the past, to vanished peoples and vanished cultures so that the explorer could return from some distant corner of the earth and exhibit to us stay-at-homes, avid for new thrills, his trophies of an ancient day. During the last few years Egypt, Mongolia, Yucatan and South America have been yielding up their treasures of the distant past, and modern photographs and newspaper illustrations have made the objects of use and art of these ancient peoples as familiar to the average American as the articles of his every-day life.

Five years ago the Yale University Press was struck with the idea that ten generations of Americans who have preceded the present one on this continent have left behind them a great mass of interesting objects and pictorial records of scenes with which the American of today is totally unfamiliar. What then could be more interesting to us than to reveal to us our own antiquities?

So the Press set out upon its "exploring expedition" with the sanction and under the supervision of the Yale university council's committee on publications. Ralph Henry Gabriel of the history department of that institution was selected for editor. With him were associated members of the Yale and other faculties. Henry Jones Ford and Harry Morgan Ayres were made associate editors; Oliver McKee, assistant editor; Charles M. Andrews, Herbert E. Bolton, Irving N. Countryman, William E. Dodd, Dixon Ryan Fox, Allen Johnson, William Bennett Munro, Victor H. Paltsits, Arthur M. Schlesinger and Nathanial W. Stephenson, advisory editors, and Davis M. Matteson, indexer. To their aid was summoned a group of brilliant writers and a staff of historical investigators and the work began. The object of the "expedition" was to discover material of all sorts which would enable them to present in pictorial form a historical record which any person, even the immigrant who has not yet learned the tongue of his adopted country, could read and see for himself the onward sweeping march of American progress in every phase of American life.

From the beginning it was realized that American history goes back much farther than that October day in 1492 when Columbus set foot on the soil of the New world, that the discovery of America was but an incident in the discovery of Asia and that to illustrate the background of American history it was necessary to find pictures which would show the influence in Europe as far back as the time of Carpini and Marco Polo. So the earliest dated picture in the Pageant is a page from the Latin manuscript of Adam of Bremen, written in the Eleventh century, in which the first mention of Vinland is made. This manuscript was located in the Staats Bibliothek at Vienna, Austria.

It is typical of the wide range of research necessary for the success of the undertaking. The libraries of Europe, of Canada and of Mexico were ransacked for forgotten objects and pictures. The quest for material took the research workers to every possible source in the 48 states of the Union, to private collections, government collections, historical societies, state libraries, museums, art galleries, learned societies, institutes, religious and educational institutions, municipal collections and archives and dealers' collections.

In every case only authentic pictures were accepted and many of these are reproduced for the first time. An example of this is the portrait of Pocahontas, perhaps the most noted Indian woman in history, which is one of the illustrations for this article. The photographic reproduction of this authentic portrait, made by special arrangement with the present owner, who lives in England, has never been reproduced until it appeared in the Pageant.

When even the most exhaustive research disclosed the fact that no authentic picture, portraying an important point in our national history, existed, an original drawing was prepared either by Harry A. Ogden or C. W. Jeffreys, both distinguished historical artists. Three of the pictures which accompany this article—"The Conestoga Wagon," in which the tide of American expansion rolled westward, "Pilgrims Learning to Fertilize With Fish," the earliest example of "scientific agriculture" and "Threshing Wheat in Colonial Days"—all by Mr. Jeffreys, are examples of this special work. Even more striking is the fact that Mr. Ogden took two and a half years to prepare a series of seventeen pages of illustrations depicting in color approximately 240 examples of the uniforms worn by officers and men in the army and navy through all the wars, as well as the uniforms of their opponents. This alone cost more than $6,000, but it presents a fund of historical information which has never before been available to historians and writers.

With more than 10,000 authenticated pictures as the basis, publication of "The Pageant of America" was then begun in fifteen volumes, each with approximately 650 illustrations and 60,000 words of text. Although the Pageant is a pictorial history, it is not a history in pictures alone. Each volume begins with an essay or outline in which the historical development to be pictured is swiftly and graphically described. Each chapter deals with a group of pictures in sequence with short introductions and short captions under the picture which tie together the pictures in the presentation of the main topic—an illustrated "running story," as it were.

In keeping with the dignity and importance of the subject matter is the craftsmanship which went into making these books: Special paper, printing the pictures from half-tones instead of from electrotypes made from half-tones and running the presses at half speed in order to insure an evenness of impression—all contribute to marking an epoch in the art of bookmaking.

The fact that history is more than a record of war and politics was never more strikingly illustrated than it is in "The Pageant of America." Every phase of American activity is represented. Agriculture, commerce, industry, religion, education, the fine arts, literature, architecture, the drama and sports—all are included in the scope of the work and all contribute to a faithful presentation of the origin, struggles and achievements of a great people woven into a rich tapestry of great deeds.

THRESHING WHEAT IN COLONIAL DAYS—Drawn for the Pageant of America by C. W. Jeffreys from accounts left by John Bordley of Maryland, one of the pioneers of American agriculture. This drawing illustrates the unique method of threshing grain on the Bordley plantation.

The titles of the volumes indicate the comprehensive nature of the series and the names of the men and women responsible for the individual volumes is sufficient evidence that here is an authentic interpretation of America. Volume one, "Adventurers in the Wilderness," is by Clark Wissler, curator of the division of anthropology of the American Museum of Natural History and a noted writer on the subject of the American Indian; Constance Lindsay Skinner, historian, novelist and playwright, and William Wood, author and military and naval historian. It deals with the native American before the coming of the white man, the colonization of America by different European countries down to the time of the inevitable conflict for mastery in the New world.

Volume two, "The Lure of the Frontier," by Ralph Henry Gabriel, associate professor of history at Yale, tells of the westward push of our pioneers until the wilderness had been conquered. Professor Gabriel is also the author of Volume three, "Toilers of Land and Sea" which is the epic of the farmer, the plow following the march of the pioneer. The fisheries industry is subordinated to agriculture in this book but, it presents an adequate record of the harvesters of the sea. To Malcolm Keir, professor of economics at Dartmouth college and a noted author on economic subjects, fell the responsibility for volumes four and five, "The March of Commerce" and "The Epic of Industry." The names are self-explanatory and these two volumes no less than the others present a marvelous panorama of American life.

Volume six, "The Winning of Freedom," by William Wood, has a special interest at this time because it is the record of the forces which brought on the struggle for independence and of that struggle itself, the sesquicentennial of which we are celebrating this year. Included in this volume also is the pictorial record of the War of 1812 and the Mexican war and in volume seven, "In Defense of Liberty," Mr. Wood takes up the theme of our military history at the opening of the conflict between the states and carries it down through the World war.

In volume eight, "Builders of the Republic," the Pageant turns from war's alarms to political history, which Frederic Austin Ogg, professor of political science at the University of Wisconsin, surveys from colonial days to the opening of the Civil war. John Spencer Bassett, professor of history at Smith college, then takes up the theme in volume nine, "Makers of a New Nation," and carries it down to the present time. In volume ten Luther Allen Weigle, Sterling professor of religious education at Yale, tells an illustrated story of "American Idealism," embracing American religious life, education and the rise of humanitarian movements.

The titles of the remaining volumes of the series speak for themselves. "The American Spirit in Letters," by Stanley Thomas Williams, assistant professor of English at Yale; "The American Spirit in Art," by Frank Jewett Mather, Jr., Marquand professor of art and archeology at Princeton university; Charles Rufus Morey of the same institution, and William James Henderson, music critic and author; "The American Spirit in Architecture," by Talbot Faulkner Hamlin, architect, author and lecturer; "The American Stage," by Montrose Jonas Moses, editor and dramatic critic, and "Annals of American Sport," by Charles Pike Sawyer, newspaper man, critic and author—all complete the picture of American life as it has been through the centuries and as it is today.

Homes Modeled Like Beehives

The community house is one of the unusual institutions of the Indian natives of Guiana. They usually are about 70 feet in diameter and provide housing accommodations for more than 30 Indian families, says A. Hyatt Verrill, in the Wide World Magazine.

The families sharing the dwelling are friendly and each respects the rights of his neighbors, keeping strictly within the limits of the space allotted to him. In the center of the structure, which is cone-shaped and covered with a grass roof, a fire is kept smoldering, and about this fire the women and a few men may be found working at their various occupations at almost any time during the daylight hours.

Some of the women are weavers who make the gayly colored hammocks in which the natives sleep, while others are occupied in doing bead work or cooking. The work of the men consists largely of making bows and arrows or doing featherwork. The feather crowns of the Wai-wol tribesmen are enormous affairs and often are topped off with great plumes. These elaborate crowns, however, are worn only at ceremonies and dances.

Humming Bird's Food

A humming bird will fly miles to find a gladiolus, as its flowers contain the minute insects which the bird craves. Perhaps it would be more poetic to be able to tell the little ones that the bird is "getting honey," but the fact is that it eats insects. According to authorities, the bright color of the "glands" is what attracts the humming bird, the creature knowing, through generations of instinctive thought (if we may so call it), that where it finds such colors it will discover its favorite food.

True joy is serene and sober.

Work, forgetting all responsibility of time, appreciation or censure; enjoy it or make believe you do, and in time you really will. TASTY TIDBITS

When there are several pieces of cheese going to waste, grate them and add to boiling hot cream, stir until the cheese is dissolved, add paprika and cayenne and pour into cream cheese jars. The cheese will be creamy and delicious.

Cheese Salad.—Take a cream cheese or two, add thick sweet cream to soften, mix well and add chopped chives, green pepper and nuts. Make into balls and serve with a good boiled dressing on lettuce. Cottage cheese enriched with cream and served with dressing on lettuce makes a fine salad.

Olive Salad.—Peel olives, remove the stones, then roll them up over blanched almonds. Cover with french dressing and a handful of chopped mint. Let stand overnight to season. Drain in the morning and add fresh mint. Serve on head lettuce with thick mayonnaise.

Banana Cream.—Slice three ripe bananas, press through a sieve, add a box of ripe crushed berries, reserving some of the juice; mix lightly with enough powdered sugar to sweeten and set aside to chill. Serve in sherbet cups with sweetened whipped cream and some of the berry juice on top.

The orange is rich in vitamines and is given early to the small baby, between feedings, always straining the juice. They are rich in sugar, have salts of high value while the flavor is especially attractive. Taken at night they are especially good for constipation. A glass of orange juice can be taken by the most delicate stomach and is especially recommended for biliousness.

Dredge the tenderloins with flour, season well and brown in a hot frying pan, turning often to keep from scorching, then cook slowly until cooked to taste. Baste during the cooking. Serve rare with baked bananas.

Fruit Ice Cream.—Take the juice of three oranges, three lemons, three bananas mashed and put through a sieve, add one or more cupfuls of sugar and a quart of thin cream. Freeze as usual.

Choice Recipes.

When making blueberry pie add a teaspoonful of vinegar or a handful of seeded unripe grapes, a tablespoonful of molasses, sugar to sweeten and a teaspoonful of butter. Wrap a two-inch strip of white cloth around the pastry after wringing the cloth out of cold water. This will keep the juices from running from the pie. Remove as soon as the pie is baked.

Dream Pie.—Whip the whites of four eggs very stiff, add four heaping tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar, and beat again, add four more tablespoonfuls of sugar and beat until well mixed, then fold in one pint of berries (if canned, drain). Pour this mixture into a hot baked pastry shell and leave in irregular mounds. Bake until brown.

Butterscotch Cake.—Cream one-half cupful of butter, add one cupful of sugar, when well mixed add two egg yolks, beat well, then add two-thirds of a cupful of milk slowly, beating well. Sift two cupfuls of flour with three teasponfuls of baking powder and one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, add to the first mixture. Add a teaspoonful of vanilla and fold in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs. Bake in layer tins in a moderate oven. For the icing boil two cupfuls of light sirup, one-half cupful of butter and one-half cupful of milk until it forms a soft ball in cold water. Cool without stirring. When it is almost cold spread over the layers and top of cake. Decorate with halves of nutmeats.

Pecan Pie.—Mix one cupful of sugar and three-fourths of a cupful of sirup, add three eggs, one at a time, beating thoroughly after each egg is added; next add one-half cupful of butter melted, and one cupful of coarsely chopped nutmeats. Pour into a rich pie crust and bake one and one-half to two hours. Have the oven very hot the first few minutes to bake the crust, then lower the heat and bake slowly.

Ice Box Pudding.—Take one pound of vanilla wafers, one can of shredded pineapple, one cupful of nutmeats, one-half pound of butter, four eggs and two cupfuls of sugar. Cream the sugar and butter thoroughly, then add eggs one at a time; beat twenty minute. Put nutmeats and wafers through the meat grinder. Make alternate layers of the nutmeats and wafers with the pineapple and cream filling until all is used. Let stand in the ice box for twelve hours. Serve with whipped cream.

Chancery Slow to Let Go of Money

Some of the accounts in chancery in England date back to 1720, and many of them are earlier than 1800—a period of some importance to claimants. After a balance is about a century old, the people may be entitled to a share of it, and the cost of recovering it may be more than it is worth. For instance, a certain account of $15.00 odd will never be claimed. The persons entitled to it are well aware of its existence; but to make changes to disgorge it would cost more than the sum involved. Another account will also remain on the books forever. It is worth exactly tenpence (20 cents), but there are more than 200 exceeding $5,000 each.

Many accounts are survivals of antiquities. A gentleman leaves an annuity to somebody, and his trustees place in chancery the capital sum necessary to secure it. When, some thirty or forty years later, the annuitant dies, everybody else connected with the case is also dead, and it has been completely forgotten.

New Tank "Eye"

Through fire, gas, fog, mist, rain or hail a tank can be kept to a set course without the crew's having to get out to take its bearings, when the new gyroscopic "eye," being perfected by army scientists at Baltimore, is installed.

"This "eye" is a device attached to the tank's machinery, says Popular Science Monthly, that indicates just where the tank is on a map, drawn to scale, of the land being crossed. It is controlled by a compass on the roof of the tank. As the tank moves, its exact path is marked with a needle on the map.

Sure Enough!

"Did you ever hear a fish lying about the size of the man that caught it?" philosophically inquired Uncle Dunkle, "or ever think that many a prosperous man owes his success to the advice he didn't take, or that a young lawyer's brow sometimes bulges more than his stomach? Ever wonder why the john-donkey that rocks the boat is usually the only one saved after the upsetting? Ever notice how hard many people labor to keep out of work, or try to discover any good reason why the fool killer doesn't slay all dancing masters? And if you have noticed any or all of these points what difference do they make?"—Kansas City Star.

Nancy Jane, age seven and a half, was a member of a family party taking a drive one evening. A number of hills were encountered and it was seen they made the child nervous. However, she said nothing until the car stood poised at the top of the last and steepest descent of all, when she burst out: "Well, I wish when the world wrinkled it hadn't wrinkled so deep!"

"When I got here he was at the wheel. I was sure then. I shouted at him and he paid no attention. I could hear the water pounding down into the tunnel and I tried to drag him away. I did once and tried to twist back the wheel but he jumped at me and we fought. He was too strong for me and he flung me off at last. He was crazy, beside himself, a madman. It wasn't just the liquor. 'I'm going to drown him,' he said. 'Drown him like a rat.' And he cursed at me first and then—threatened me.

"I was desperate. I saw a wrench on the seat and I struck him with it on the back of his head. He went down, staggering—and I got to the wheel. When the roar of the water ended I knew you were safe. I suppose I fainted. You came. . . ."

For the pair of them, for the moment, as their eyes met, there was no one else in the gatehouse. Burns stooped to the floor and picked up a tool.

"There's blood on the wrench," he said, under his breath to Cox. "Hey, where's that Mexican going?"

"It must have been Baxter I glimpsed as I came out of the shaft," Caleb was saying. "He had just come to, I suppose, and . . ."

He broke off at Burns' exclamation. The superintendent pointed to where Padilla was running over the plain toward the foothills, head low, eyes searching the ground, like a hound on trail. Something glittered in his hand.

"He's after Baxter," cried Caleb. "He'll kill him. I've got to stop that. Mrs. Carquinez, you'll go with Miss Clinton and Maria to El Nido. I'll get there later. I've got to prevent Padilla committing murder. You won't need me, Cox, go ahead without me."

He sprang through the door, hatless, his wet clothes clinging to limbs and body, starting out to run down Padilla before the avenging Mexican closed with his quarry. That the Mexican would be implacable, deaf and dumb and blind to all but his vengeance against the man who had injured la senorita, Caleb knew. Nevertheless Padilla must be stopped from crime and the penalty. He thought more of this than of Baxter as he followed the dusty trail across the plain that led straight toward a wooded arroyo.

Padilla was nearly halfway to the foothills before Caleb started but he gradually overhauled the Mexican. He was furious enough, remembering Betty's white skin with the bruises on it, her torn garments, to beat Baxter to a pulp. Baxter, he realized, must have overheard Feely's report to Burns and seized his chance to get even with Caleb.

The thought of Betty swift to his rescue, her intuition quickened, surely by some tie between them, of Betty fighting with the drunken, crazy Baxter, beating him down with the wrench, was glorious to him in proportion to his rage. The only thing that curbed his own anger from the Mexican's intent to kill was, perhaps, the sight of the knife in Padilla's hand, the sudden knowledge of what penalty the Mexican would have to pay for murder, of Maria and Betty's sorrow. But he was not going to let Baxter off scot-free if he got at him. Only the one thought beat against the wrath that exulted already at the idea of getting Baxter within reach of his hands, the remembrance that punishment must stop short of murder. There his New England sanity fought for restraint. He had won Betty—he must not lose her.

A little stream sometimes babbled down the arroyo where Padilla, a hundred yards ahead of Caleb still, disappeared in a jungle of buckeye and manzanita. Footprints of them both were plain in the still moist earth for a few paces and then abruptly disappeared. Baxter had taken to the sidehill and the thicker undergrowth. Caleb halted perplexed. He had little breath left for the call to Padilla, he felt it was useless before he uttered it.

He stood alert, listening. To his right, and ahead, there sounded a sharp crack of dry twigs and he started off again, buffeting his way through low boughs and brambles.

He was certain that Baxter could not elude Padilla. For years the Mexican had guarded his senorita under the vow taken by him and Maria, that had held back their own happiness and added fuel to a slowly growing hate that, now the time had come, would give deep knife wounds in exchange for the bruises of his mistress. Unless Caleb could come up with him Baxter was as good as dead.

A shrill cry of agony sounded from the dense growth of the arroyo, not far away, toward the head of the cleft.

For a second Caleb stood still, chilled by the crawling horror of that shriek, the cry of a coward facing death. It was not repeated. There was no sound at all in the hot gulch where no leaf stirred.

Then he heard an exclamation in Spanish—"Reina Sanctissima!"—and plunged ahead through the tangle to come out in a tiny clearing.

A live oak grew by a slab of gray rock on which, as on some savage altar, lay Baxter, the sunlight drifting down through the gnarled boughs of the tree and gilding a face the color of clay, a dropped jaw that showed the white teeth amid the untrimmed beard, eyes rolled up, already glazing, the face in a snarl, inhuman. Bending above him, shrinking back a little with his knife upraised, stood Padilla. He seemed to have recoiled from his deed, while ready to deliver a second blow.

Caleb leaped and caught the wrist of the hand that held the blade. Padilla turned to him a face that was hard to read. There was disappointment in it, slow-dying fury—and awe.

"Senor," he said. "I did not touch heem! See, my knife is clean. There is no blood upon eet. I did not touch heem! Sangre di Cristo, he hear me comin', he run weeth his head on his shoulder an', all of a sudden he put his han' to his side, he cry out, twist roun' an' fall like you see. When I reach heem he is muerte! Dead! Because he is too much afraid."

Caleb loosened Baxter's collar and shirt, slipped his hand in over the heart.

"He is dead, senor—I mean to keel him myself. But eet is the judgment of God."

Caleb knew that it was the "champagne heart" of Baxter, too long abused, the overtaxed engine of a misused machine, that had given way at last. Fright had helped, no doubt; the wild, pounding, panting run with the knowledge of Padilla swift and relentless upon him with lifted and glittering knife. Baxter had burned out. But he did not attempt to modify the Mexican's statement. He put his own handkerchief over the face. It was horrible—terrible! There was none of the oft-quoted "peace of death" upon it. The eyes stared, glassy and wild. The livid lips were drawn back to show the teeth and the snarl that made the features so frightfully bestial. It was as if the soul of Baxter had departed utterly when he had turned the wheel of the water-gallery with murder in his heart and now, only the brute that dwelled in the subconscious was revealed—in full. A dead, mad face. Doctor Fields' theory had awful testimony here.

All hate died out in Caleb. Here was a mad dog—dead. An atavism, self-produced and self-annihilated.

"I should hav' like to keel him," said Padilla. "An' you, senor, would you hav' only talk to heem? I weel stay here until you come back. Perhaps you weel better send the sheriff an' see la senorita, to tell her the man who hurt her is muerte. It is better I wait here for the sheriff. Also . . ."

He pointed upwards. High in the blue, swinging in circles that gradually narrowed above the arroyo, soared a buzzard. Even while they looked another appeared—another.

"They are queek," said Padilla. "Soon there weel be more. The sheriff mus' not find heem disturb'."

The Mexican crossed himself.

"You saw his face, senor," he said in a low voice—as if the dead could hear. "Sangre di Cristo! Eet is the face of a devil—el aspecto del demonio."

CHAPTER XVII

Dios Bendiga a Vd.

A week later Caleb sat with Betty in the twilight on the broad mission bench in the patio at El Nido. In the big room Stella Carquinez was at the piano, playing softly. Carquinez himself had been forced to go to Golden to discuss a commission. Their child had gone to bed. Maria was softly crooning a lullaby at the far end of the patio garden, putting Mary Morgan's baby—of which she had not been ashamed—to sleep.

Caleb and Betty were silent. He was trying to find words for what he wanted to tell her in fitting language, and finding it difficult. His emotions confounded him in this supreme issue. The nearness of her, the consciousness that to gain her was everything, to lose her meant all the joy taken out of success and life, now and to come, set his heart pounding till he thought that she must surely hear it, sapped his confidence.

"Betty," he said at last, "you saved my life. What do you want to do with it?"

She did not affect to misunderstand him. He had known she would not do that. There was something established between them, a bond that had made their silence filled with magnetism. Caleb hoped that it was love, with her, as it was with him. As he sat, hands on knees, leaning toward her in the dusk, trying to read her face, he felt his fingers trembling. Every atom of him longed for her, reached out for her in an ardor that seemed to belong to another Caleb Warner, lately created.

"What do you want me to do with it?" she asked.

"Share it, Betty. All ways and always."

"All ways?" She had risen, standing by one of the posts of the pergola, jasmine wreathed. Now he stood opposite to her, close and looking down at her upturned face. The curves of her mouth maddened him. He clenched his hands until his nails stung his flesh, hanging on to himself, restraining a desire to woo her only with kisses. His reason fought with his passion. He knew Betty Clinton was not to be won that way alone. Something ran riot in his veins, infecting his being. There was no congealed blood there, for all of Baxter's sneer. And it affected the girl. He could see her sway a little and he suddenly caught her in his arms.

"Yes, all ways, Betty. Lover and mate and partner in everything. You are the other half of me. To share in all things, joy and sorrow, love and work. Love first, Betty, and then we'll go on together with the work that will be ours, planned together, done together—and so to love again."

She had not resisted him. Her head had lain against his shoulder. She lifted it, searching his face. Then, even in the dusk, he saw hers become softly radiant, as, satisfied, she raised her lips to his, her body, soft and infinitely human, clinging close to his. And, for a time, he knew that she was not lacking in the passion that had possessed him.

"We shall go on together," she said softly—after quite a while—"always on and on, Caleb. Bringing water to thirsty places and to thirsty people? Blending work with love to make all perfect? Anything else would only mean stagnation in the end."

"I am the Water-Bearer," he said—he was a little inclined to vaunt in his triumph. "You remember the sign of Aquarius?"

"You must give me mine back again."

"I shall. The two fishes, joined together with a ribbon. Water-creatures, Betty. You and I, in the same element, bound by love."

The music within became louder, ended in a crash of chords. Stella Carquinez came to the patio entrance.

"What are you two doing? Mooning in the dark?" she queried. "Oh!" she added softly, "Honeymooning! I am so glad—my dears. Where are you going, Betty?"

"I am going to tell Maria," she said as she swiftly passed them. Caleb saw tears on her face as she went through the door. He knew they were tears of happiness.

"You are lucky, but tardy," Mrs. Carquinez said to Caleb. "I don't know that you deserve her. You disappointed me last month, at our little celebration."

"I wanted to finish my work," said Caleb simply.

Stella Carquinez laughed softly.

"Dios! Once a Yankee always a Yankee! But you're well mated. Betty—here she comes with Maria, after all."

"Senor," said Maria, stately for all her weight, "It is very well. You will make my senorita happy an' she, ah senor, the good God is very kind to you! An' now I am to make Luis happy, my senorita says. He needs some one to look after heem, for he is only a greet child. We shall throw away those two rugs of the puma skeen. My knees have worn off the hair. But we shall still pray—for two now—perhaps, manana, for more. Quien sabe? Now she hav' some one to protect, I," she broke off into a torrent of Spanish, stooped, caught both their hands and kissed them, vanished into the garden.

"She sets an excellent example," said Mrs. Carquinez. "Adios y buenos noches! Dios bendiga a Vd," she added softly at the door.

But they did not hear her benediction. They were quite alone before Elsie Carquinez had left the room.

[THE END]

Reduce by Breathing, Says French Doctor

Bed rest instead of physical exercise, and deep exhaling from the lungs, in addition to the usual nonfattening diet, are prescribed as a cure for obesity by Dr. G. Leven, general secretary of the Therapeutic society of Paris.

Doctor Leven teaches his patients to breathe out so hard that they bend the flame of a candle and to inhale only very slightly. The breathing can be done lying in bed, sitting up or standing erect. Series of five exhalations are repeated every half hour fifteen to twenty times a day. One patient lost fifteen pounds in twenty days and another sixty pounds in the course of eight months.

When a person overeats, Doctor Leven believes, the solar plexus is irritated and this disturbs the functioning of those cerebral centers that regulate the destruction of fat. Other conditions may also cause this disturbance. The course of treatment prescribed is claimed to counteract the effect.

Where She Ranked

"Am I the only woman you ever loved?"

"Oh, no," he answered, promptly; "you are the sixth."

"The sixth!" she exclaimed, suddenly relieving his shoulder of the weight of her head.

"Yes," he said, coldly, "there were five before you—my mother, an aunt, and three sisters."

And thereafter she endeavored to be more specific when she asked questions.

WHY DENY YOURSELF THE BEST IN MOTOR CAR BODIES

The finest of the new cars in all price classes have now been announced—Cadillac Buick, Chevrolet, Oakland, Oldsmobile and Pontiac.

All offer vastly greater values than ever before in motor car history.

All register amazing advantages in performance and ease and economy of operation.

But the greatest factor of their new glory is described in a single phrase—Body by Fisher.

Here is their supreme beauty—setting absolutely new standards in charm of design and interior fitting.

Here are unequalled factors of safety which add so much to your comfort and confidence.

Here are exclusive conveniences and niceties which do, indeed, make the car with Body by Fisher superior in its class.

No matter what mechanical developments may allure you, it is the body of your car with which you live most intimately—that is why the General Motors units, makers of the best of the new cars in all price classes, point so proudly to the emblem—Body by Fisher.

With the finest of the market to choose from there is no reason why you should deny yourself the greater safety, beauty and comfort which only a Body by Fisher can give.

Dog Hospital New Idea in England

Four young women who are studying the care and cure of sick dogs at an animal hospital at Totteridge, Herts, England, intend, when they have completed their training, to take up work in various parts of the country as "district nurses" for dogs.

In their course of practical studies at the institution, which contains 300 kennels, they have discovered there are many dog lovers who do not understand how to manage their pets in times of illness.

According to the pioneer of the new profession, dog lovers with pets of comparatively small monetary value will, for reasons of affection, gladly pay as much as $25 for their treatment; and many people who for various reasons may be unable or unwilling to send their sick animals to "hospital" will probably be glad to avail themselves of the services of these "district nurses."

More Britons Stay Home

In 1925 there were 140,594 British subjects who left permanent residences in Great Britain and took up permanent abodes in non-European countries. This shows a falling off of the number leaving that country, as in 1924 more than 155,000 left, and in 1923 there were 256,284 who sought homes elsewhere.

Has Several Broods

There is no native bird which attempts to equal the mourning dove in domestic accomplishments, says Nature Magazine. Its breeding season extends from early May until late September, and, if fate is lenient with the frail establishment of the bird, three or four broods may be raised to maturity with scarcely a pause between each family.

That night it snowed again and she had me clean the entire 150 feet over again before she gave me the sum that I had asked for one job.—H. A., in Chicago Tribune.

WOODSIDE

The Feast of Our Lady of the Wayside was celebrated on Sunday at the picturesque little church at Portola. The service was largely musical, the music being furnished by members of the Family Club. The Ave Maria was beautifully rendered by violin, viola and harp, and vocal solos were given by Harold Dana and Harry Robertson. Nathan's Firestone's viola had such depth and color that it was taken by many of us for a cello. The church was crowded with a colorful throng including most of our local population as well as many visitors from the Family Farm.

Just as the church services were over a fire started on the hillside west of the Family Farm but such was the number of firefighters available that it was extinguished before the Woodside fire department could arrive. Women worked with the men beating out the fire with wet sacks and green branches.

NEW KEATON FILM CONVULSES CROWDS

Buster Produces Something New In Comedy Line with Tale Of Bogus Battler

Buster Keaton is coming to town in a comedy that has left audiences weak from laughter in every city where the picture has been shown. It is "Battling Butler," the frozen-faced fun-maker's latest production and the one which made even blase Hollywood admit there's something new in comedies. The picture will be shown locally at the Sequoia Theatre, starting Wednesday and continuing through Thursday.

The famous comedian has turned prize-fighter—that is, he masquerades as a professional pugilist—for the sake of a pretty girl. He has the role of a wealthy youth who takes the count from Kid Cupid, only to discover that to make good in love he has to make good in cauli-flowered ear circles. His name is Alfred Butler, so it's a comparatively easy matter to tell the girl—and her hard-boiled family — that he's "Battling Butler," the fighter.

Everything goes along swimmingly until the real "Butler" appears on the scene and adds to the complications. The fact that the ring champion suspects the bogus fighter of carrying on an affair with Mrs. "Battling Butler," doesn't make the love-sick youth's path any sarootherr.

Boisterous and Big

In addition to being a scream from start to finish, "Battling Butler" has many spectacular scenes which would do credit to the biggest dramatic productions. Thousands of people appear in the picture. The largest fight club on the Pacific Coast was rented during the filming of "Battling Butler," and Keaton's company spent several weeks "shooting" scenes in picturesque sections of California.

Sally O'Neil, Snitz Edwards Tom Lilson, Francis McDonald, Eddie Borden, Walter James, Mary O'Brien and Buddy Fine are some of the well-known players in the supporting cast.

Buster himself directed the comedy, which was produced by Joseph M. Schenck.

In addition there will be a two-reel comedy and a Grantland Rice subject for lovers of out-door sports.

Cleaning Without Odor by the F. Thomas Process

Our many years of experience has taught us that it is impossible to do perfect cleaning with cheap, inferior methods. That is why we found it necessary to invest nearly $500,000 in the equipment of a plant and the establishment of an expert organization to do the quality of work demanded by our customer.

With the "F. THOMAS PROCESS we do not only remove every particle of dust but we return your garments without that usual disagreeable smell of gasoline Every drop of gasoline we use in cleaning is redistilled and very highly refined.

Raw gasoline — the kind that you buy to you automobile — is full of heavy oils and unfit for cleaning fabrics. It is little bet ter than ordinary distillate and leaves a sickening gasoline smel in your clothes.

NOTES OF A WORLD TRAVELER

By Professor Ferdinand Schraidt

Second Article

The river Elbe, which has made possible the size and wealth of the city of Hamburg, is probably the most majestic of the German waterways; not as colourful and romantic as the Rhine, but adorned with a vestment of greatness, that is only enhanced by the vast stretches of law lands that boarder its solemn course. Eighty million cubic yards of water are moving toward the ocean with each low tide, and about one-half of it is returning when the high tide seems to reverse the river's course. Untold energies are constantly moving back and forth, but no technical knowledge has so far been able to utilize this tremendous power, and all that could be done was to regulate the river bed, in order to maintain its depth and the velocity of the flowing water. For this purpose numerous stonedams, three and four hundred feet in length, have been built far out into the river, and some day the extensive system of water way correction will have been completed, and the river will flow as it is best suited for navigation, with the greatest usefulness and least danger. And if the primitive power of the sea and the storms should be able to destroy again this work of human ingenuity and toil, coming generations will take up anew this struggle against the elements, in the firm belief, that thanks to its increasing spiritualization the human race must finally remain victorious.

This broad river, which glides noiselessly toward the north, has a romance of its own, not visible at first sight, but perceptible in the stillness, should one perchance be walking along one of the bordering dikes on a clear summer night. A signal fire is blinking in the distance, there another, there a third; out of the indefinite darkness they shine, seemingly so near as if our hand could grasp them. Then suddenly the lights are gone; only the stars remain in the sky over which perhaps the last rays of a "Northern light" are dimly passing. Close at our feet dark big forms are gliding slowly past with one red and one green eye; steamers upon their way between the ocean and the city. Over yonder sings a nightingale, and large birds, not unlike pelicans, are yet fluttering lazily through the high grass or reed. The nights are short, and the mild air is not conducive to rest and repose, and the pulsation of nature is ever felt with its unspeakable inspiration.

One can hardly realize then, that winter ever does descend upon this landscape, when large masses of ice, the terror of the sailor, are floating up and down with the stream, working like saws on the wooden ships, or threatening, should the masses get blocked on their way, to snap off bridgeheads and to break the dikes. Great tugs are employed as ice breakers to reduce the danger, and it is a peculiar sight to see the whole width of the Elbe, two and more miles wide a vast field of shoving masses of ice, where shipping seems helpless and yet is performed with great effort and daring, because man wills it.

Along the lower course of the Elbe we see the "Marsch," fertile low lands of alluvial soil, which is the best of the whole country. Here we count the well known Holstein cows by the thousands grazing upon their native fields; here we find the Grafenstein apple, and an abundance of other fruits and corn and vegetables, that have made this land a proverbial "granary" of the nation. The proud large farmhouse with their thatched low hanging roofs, proud in their compactness and massiveness of the Saxon type as against the Frankish type with its scattered buildings, are silent witnesses that their owners are wealthy and well to do; and the neat interior of these buildings wherein human beings and their domestic animals are housed under the same roof, although at opposite ends sometimes two hundred and more feet long; the solid comfort of the living quarters with an old-fashioned long-inherited furniture; the solemn appearance of it all, not the least of the slowly moving type of farmer with his secluded life of daily routine; all is proving, that here is no quick change in life, and a certain permanancy permeates the air, which is soothing and wholesome in view of our reckless age of haste and hurry.

At the mouth of the Elbe is Cuxhaven with piers for ocean steamers and smaller boats, that connect with the seaside. Here is also the well known pier called "Alte Liebe" (old love), which sounds like a bit of romance into this wide open reality. This name "Alte Liebe" (in Low German "Ole Leev"), however, is a mutilation of the word "Oliva", the name of a vessel, that had the ill luck of having foundered here once upon a time; but "Alte Liebe" suggests more to the imagination of the common people than the name of the unfortunate ship, and is therefore retained in their memory.

Far in the distance from Cuxhaven one can almost discern the lonely island of Neuwark with its more than 500 years old light tower, a massive square structure ("dat niege wark"), 85 feet high with walls 6 feet in thickness. This tower was originally thought of as a watch and refuge place against pirates; now it is provided with an up-to-date lighting system of powerful lenses and an Argand lamp.

Peculiar illusions are playing upon our sense here; one would think that innumerable pedestrians are approaching from the shore; they are nothing but surf waves, which are carried high into the air by the streaming ocean. Now one can see the big tower, now it is gone or seems to float in the air; it is just as if the spirits of the great searovers, Klaus Stortebecker and Godeke Michels, are yet restlessly floating upon the waters, and in transfigured form live on in the memory of the people.

And here is the "Watt", sand banks or low beaches which are submerged with each high tide; land that is sea, and sea that is land. Here lie hopes buried in eternity; villages and human beings which the sea with its storms from the west and the north has destroyed and buried into the deep. Here and there are debris of ships, which are sinking into the shifting sand; a stranded vessel is apt to disappear in a few hours in this treacherous soil, of which Klaus Groth and Theodor Storm have told us in their unique way many a sad story. The natives are waging here a constant struggle against the elements to maintain their hard gained ground and home. It is a sturdy silent race, that grows here and toils under astonishing hardships, just barely making a living upon their "Hallig" or "Wurt".

It is a scene of oppressive wilderness in the calmness of the summer; but it suggests almost despair, when the winter storms are raging.

BUSINESS judgment BROUGHT HOME

YOUNG Mrs. Wellford was talking about her husband's recent illness.

"Bill was home for a whole week. It was his first real chance to see me in action as a housewife—we've been married only a year, you know.

"The third day he said to me: 'Sally, you need an Extension Telephone. You're wearing yourself out, running up and down stairs and from room to room every time the telephone rings. I never realized before how much a woman will put up with without complaining. I wouldn't stand for it a minute in my office.'" (Wellford's Inc. was a model office.)

"And so?" said her visitor.

"There it is," said Sally proudly.

An Extension Telephone costs only a few cents a week.
